Letter from the CEO Socrates Bueno

4.8% of the USA workforce is employed by the construction industry, as of January 2022!

Isn’t that something? Regardless of the various challenges faced in the last decade, the latest one being Covid 19, the construction industry continues to be a resilient industry that adapts to the market and economic conditions to strive and remain a leading industry. This year also comes with its own challenges such as an increase in construction costs and supply chain issues, just to mention a few. However, I strongly believe that the ability to see an opportunity where there’s a problem and then adapt and execute projects successfully, will define a positive outcome for companies in the industry, and moreover, will enhance the relationship with their clients. CVG is no exception. We’ve been striving and adapting to current circumstances and, above all, making every effort to bring substantial added value to our clients. Consequently, our various operations have seen important growth in their respective markets. The USA, Mexico, and Costa Rica are just an example. However, none of the above happens without the right talent on board. At CVG, we have been very lucky to have a team of collaborators that have taken ownership of our company’s objective, and for that, I cannot thank them enough. They truly make our “We make projects happen” slogan a reality.
